Tawny Mustache.

She saw him first on the corner of Main and Chipewake Streets. This is how it happened. It was in a heavy snow storm: she was in the cutter with Delia Howe, and was driving. They were dashing around the corner; he crossing the street. The wind was blowing the snow into her face in a blinding fashion so she never saw him until her horse was stopped by a strong hand on the bridle. It was done so suddenly, it almost threw Delia and herself from the seat. She had come very near running over him. Of course it was her place to beg pardon; but, instead, she flashed an indignant glance at him for having presumed to lay hand on her horse, and saw a heavily built gentleman, whose great coat and fur cap were completely white with snow. He still had his hand on the bridle, as if waiting for her to speak; as she did not do so, he coolly twisted his tawny mustache with the hand not employed, and said "Your apology is accepted!" then walked on.

The horse, as suddenly released as he had been stopped, dashed ahead at a furious rate; she did not succeed in getting him fully under her control and broken into an even trot, until they had struck Delaware Avenue. Then, for the first time, the two girls looked at each other.

"Did you ever know such unparalleled impudence?" Her cheeks were brilliant; her eyes flashing with the excitement of taming her infuriated horse.

"He came near being our death!" gasped Delia, looking as if she was going to faint.

"I should actually enjoy running over such a man," said "Hagar," to whom the "unparalleled impudence" seemed the all-absorbing theme.

"How we did dash around those corners," and Delia's very voice trembled.

"I don't feel as if I could go home without giving it to him," from Hagar.

"I remembered every fib I ever told," from Delia.

"I should know him all the while; he had a tawny mustache," from Hagar, and she loosened her sable box as if the recollection of the cool manner in which he had twisted said mustache made her warm.

"Dear!" expected fully to be laid out in my new white silk.

There is no knowing how long they have continued their conversation, each enlarging on her own thought, without paying the slightest attention to the other, if it had not been for this rather worldly remark of Delia's. Hagar heard it, and laughed.

"On the whole, Delia, is a pity I didn't let Dandy take his own way, and have gone out of this world in style. Hagar's party would of course have been given up, and I would have made a last dying request to be buried in my gorgeous new pink silk. Wouldn't I have cut a gay figure in my coffin?"

"O, Hagar! How can you talk so recklessly, when we have just rescued him from our lives?" And the little color that had come into Delia's face receded. Hagar laughed.

"Why, Del, is pink silk any wickeder than white? Besides, you're a little thing, we weren't any place near our death; Dandy wouldn't have dared kill me!"

"Why?" asked Delia.

"Because he knew well, that if he did, on my way up I would dispatch a message down below for his satanic majesty to kindly send a handful of small imps to haunt his stall, and mix sulphur and powdered blinestone with his oats. There was a mischievous twinkle in her black eyes, though she spoke in her gravest tones.

"Hagar-Southey, how can you?"

At that moment she drew rein before Mr. Howe's residence. Hagar saw the girl safely on the sidewalk; then said, sarcastically, "Never mind, Delia, when Lent comes you will see how good I will be," and drove on, while Delia went into the house, saying to herself, "I wonder what makes Hagar-Southey so ironical? She turns everything into sarcasm, and is full of wild as Dandy."

The next time she saw him was at Hagar's grand party on Delaware Avenue. She was robed in that "gorgeous new pink silk," gotten for the occasion. It just suited her marked brilliant style. One would have singled her out the instant one entered the room. She was, as usual, holding a levee: the centre of a group of gentlemen, made up partly of exclusives, who live on the froth of life, and partly of sensible, disinterested men, all held by the charm of her conversation. She was witty and sarcastic; she made them first laugh, then think. It was wonderful how many homely truths, and pointed home-thrusts, this girl covered with the guise of fun and irony. Her voice was low and cultivated, and never changed its soft musical utterance, no matter how animated or excited her theme.

He was standing outside the circle, apparently giving unobtrusive attention to the insipid platitudes of a passé belle. His organs of hearing must have been remarkably keen, for he answered correctly every time, and yet heard every word that passed in the circle. At length glancing up she caught his eye.

The recognition was instantaneous. Her face flashed; he coolly twisted his tawny mustache, and contradicted some trifling remark of the passé belle's, who looked at him in blank amazement.

At that moment, one of Strauss' waltzers floated through and filled the room. He abruptly excused himself to his astonished companion, who had been counting on his asking her to dance; saying as he did not want, himself, he might be the means of preventing her. As the dancers began to sway through the rooms, he sauntered to the conservatory. Fanny Hadley saw him go, and followed him. He was their guest, thus it was her right, and the most casual observer might see that it was her pleasure. From the conservatory door, where they stood, they had a fine view of the dancers. Fanny was gay and lively, and had a bit of characteristic information about each as they glided past. Her fresh school-girlish ways—for she was but sixteen, and not in society yet, evidently pleased and amused him.

Presently Hagar-Southey floated by. "That is the most beautiful girl in Bullock," said Fanny, enthusiastically; then added, "Everybody is in love with her; even Joe would actually put himself out to win her, and you know how lazy he is."

He was Joe's visitor—they had been friends for years; of course, he asked her name. A moment later, Delia Howe entered the conservatory on her partner's arm. They stopped to speak to Fanny, and were introduced to the stranger. Delia did not recognize him; he knew her instantly, and before the evening was out, she was highly flattered at the attention he gave her. Once, when she and Hagar happened to be a minute together, she went into ecstasies over this stranger, Joe Hadley's friend, finishing with the question—

"Hagar, who does he look like? It has puzzled me ever since I was introduced!"

"Himself," was the abrupt reply.

"But he must look like some one, or his face would not be so familiar, for I never saw him before," persisted Delia.

"You only think so!" was the provoking reply, and Hagar was gone. Delia naturally took the answer for the first part of her remark, and pouted.

A few minutes later, Hagar-Southey was listening to a very sentimental offer of marriage in the conservatory. She rejected the young man, and went away with Hagar. She turned to see her partner in the drawing-room, and there, seated within full hearing, shielded by the shrubbery, sat Joe Hadley's friend. Her eyes flashed; he coolly twisted his tawny mustache again, and arose to let her pass. She swept by him, her head erect, the folds of her silk drapery brushing his feet in the narrow passage. He watched her out of sight, then whistling a low tune, comfortably took his chair again.

About an hour later, she met him face to face on the door-step. She looked like a white cloud in her zephyr wraps. He had just been assisting the passé belle to get out without an escort, to her carriage. He had on the identical great coat and fur cap: even Delia Howe might have known him then. So surprised was she at meeting him, that she failed to notice the single step from the vestibule; her escort had gone ahead, so she must have fallen the entire flight, if he had not caught her; yet she would rather have fallen than have been thus saved. So annoyed was she, that even her innate courtesy forsook her. She had actually been in his arms, and her ungloved hand, thrown wildly out to catch herself, had absolutely touched his tawny mustache.

He waited an instant; then as she did not thank him, said, in the same cool way he had that other day in the snow, "You are perfectly welcome," and went into the house.

On the way home she had not a word to say. They had but a block to drive. All that block she was drawing on her glove, as if thinking this was covering up the memory of the touch of that long silk tawny mustache. But she must have failed, for when she had reached home and gained her own room, the first thing she did was to pull the glove off, which she had just put on, and look at the hand it had covered. A singularly childish act for the brilliant, sarcastic Hagar-Southey, but any one who knows any woman well knows that woman is in contradiction.

After that she was long seldom went out of an evening without meeting him. He was very wealthy, and had been travelling abroad ever since he and Joe left college; he had no home ties, so he was very willingly allowed Joe Hadley to persuade him to winter in Bullock. Such being the nature of the case, more than one of the girls had found it remarkably easy to smile upon him.

Hagar-Southey had, of course, been introduced to him, but there their acquaintance seemed to end, that is so far as conversation goes to make acquaintance. Yet the girl felt that this cool Mr. Klemm, Joe Hadley's friend, was her enemy, and she struggled against it as she would, but had an odd, irresistible fascination for her; even on entering a crowded building, her eyes as if by magnetism, instantly singled him out.

This girl had never received more attention, or refused more lovers, than she did that winter. Even Joe Hadley, lazy fellow that he was, had been so much attracted by her, that he failed, that good-natured, and did not fret over it, so their friendship was never suspended for a moment.

The strange feeling about the sweep of that tawny mustache took sudden possession of her. Her eyes dropped, her very lips quivered in her effort for control.

Hagar, resistance is useless. That first day when I stopped you, lace, and met the hash of your dark eyes, I determined that if we were not already married, you should be my wife."

"Shout!" she exclaimed angrily, struggling against his strong will; then, snatching away her hands, she shrunk to her feet, and paced the room in a nervous, excited way. He stood quietly watching her. Her strength had been broken, and she presently sank into a chair at the farther end of the room. He went over and stood beside her, one hand resting on the back of her chair, the other just touching either pale cheek; suddenly they crumpled.

"Hagar, such love as mine is as rare to bring love as the magnet to draw the needle. It has already drawn yours. I know it. You cannot hide it. His hand placed under her chin, he raised her proud head. He bent his, and then, what had been a sensation, became a certain conviction. She knew that this was not the first time that tawny mustache had swept her lips. Then her innate independence came to her aid. She said, half-sly half-comically, "Joe Hadley said you were frozen fire, he would have come nearer the truth, if he had stopped."

"If what?" looking amused.

"Nothing, only I believe heat is stronger than cold," and she threw aside her fur wraps. A little later there was the sound of sleigh bells at the door. He bade her a hasty good-night, and went out to satisfy the party's anxiety.

The next afternoon, Delia Howe called, and found Hagar in the drawing-room, where Mr. Klemm had left her a few minutes before. Of course, she went into ecstasies of delight at finding her well enough to be down stairs, then exclaimed, excitedly, "Hagar, I told you Mr. Klemm's face was familiar; he is the gentleman who stopped our sleigh, and almost proved our death that day!"

"How did you find that out?" asked Hagar, coloring.

"Oh! it came to me suddenly day before yesterday, when—evidently something had come to her suddenly now, for she looked at the insignificant new silhouette on Hagar's forefinger, and said, 'like one absolutely dully amazed: "I believe you knew it all the time!"

out. Mr. Klemm had been looking on in his cool, impenetrable way. Delia turned to him, expecting him to take her skates and escort her to the rink, to which he evidently, by his bound, when to her astonishment she saw him gently lift the ragged urchin into the sleigh, then spring to the seat so had but a minute before vacated, take the reins from Hagar's hands, and turn the horse's head homeward. In that instant she recognized him, and watched them out of sight, saying over and over to herself, "Well, I never!"

Hagar-Southey was like one dazed with surprise. Here was this "unparalleled impudence" actually driving the very horse he had stopped! Yet even that thought came second to the wondrous gentleness there had been in his lifting of the little boy. The urchin had accepted this fate in a dumb, unquestioning way. She wrapped him well in the robe, never glancing at this cool, quiet gentleman. Dandy fairly flew. The ride was a silent one. When he had drawn rein before her home, he carried the urchin up into the vestibule, leaving her to follow. When there he stood him on his little, frozen, bare feet, and suddenly facing this girl, took one of her hands in both of his, and looking down into her startled, wondering eyes, said, "Hagar-Southey"—not another word, and was gone. She led the child into the house—her eyes brilliant, her cheeks vivid, her lips trembling. In that moment she knew that she had met her master, and that she loved him.

The next evening she went to the rink again—a party called for her in a large three-seated sleigh. He was one of the number. She had hardly taken her seat before they began to chaff her about her odd protégé, having heard the story from Delia Howe. Her quiet, unobtrusive retorts soon silenced them. "What was she going to do with him?" "Keep him."

"Who did he belong to?" "Nobody." "How did she know?" She had made the lawful inquiries. When they reached the rink, Bert Klemm coolly swung her skates over his shoulder, without even so much as "By your leave," and gave her his, then after a backward buckled her skates on in that same way as it was his right. There was a dash of color in her cheeks, and, without thanking him, she started off in her fearless, graceful way.

The night was bitterly cold; there were very few on the rink, save their party. She was some distance from them all, when turning she found that her skates were giving her chase. She increased her speed; her foot struck some slight projection in the ice—she fell, and suddenly all the world was a blank. It was but for an instant. Then she came back into consciousness, with the strange feeling that that tawny mustache, whose touch she had never been able to banish from her recollection, had swept her face, and she felt that she possessed with the uncomfortable idea that that very touch had had the power to bring her back to life. She was in Bert Klemm's arms, and the others were gathering about in alarm.

"There, it is over," she said, sitting erect, and setting her lips to brace herself against a second fall. She was as pale as death. Delia Howe saw the gleam of her eyes, and tried to make her lean against her, but she said, impatiently, there was nothing the matter, and she was going to skate. Mr. Klemm, in his quiet way, bade one of the ladies take off her skates. Resistance was useless. While it was being done, he took off his. Then helping her to arise, he almost carried her from the rink.

The others were beginning to take off their skates, and insist on breaking up the party. He left them urging it, placed her in the sleigh, gave the driver his directions, and sprang to her side. When they reached their destination, he ordered the sleigh back to the rink in an hour—led her up the steps, and went in with her, though quite unasked. He, coolly took possession of the hall to lay off his overcoat and fur cap. When he entered the drawing-room, she was seated in an easy chair, her cheeks a brilliant red.

"It was entirely unnecessary. I am as well as ever!" she said, impatiently. He paid no attention to her remark, but drew a chair close before her, and took both her hands in his. She had drawn off her gloves, and tossed them on a chair near by.

The strange feeling about the sweep of that tawny mustache took sudden possession of her. Her eyes dropped, her very lips quivered in her effort for control.

Hagar, resistance is useless. That first day when I stopped you, lace, and met the hash of your dark eyes, I determined that if we were not already married, you should be my wife."

L. P. FISHER, 20 and 21 New Merchants Exchange, is our authorized Agent in San Francisco. THE "GLASGOW HERALD" ON THE RAILWAY LOAN.

We have before us a copy of the Glasgow Herald of the 25th ult. containing an article on the object of the mission of the Canadian Ministers to London. The Herald, under a certain condition, favors the Imperial guarantee for the railway loan. The condition which the Herald demands is so nearly identical with that which we predicted in July would be the view of the press of Great Britain would take that we reproduce the main features of the article without comment, except to say that the concession demanded could scarcely be made without largely depleting the revenue of the Dominion and defeating, to a very great extent, the National Policy.

"On a former occasion we expressed the decided opinion that without a change of tariff in the direction of Free Trade with this country we ought to refuse to have anything to do with this loan. But the question is not an uninteresting one to us. Our Government would certainly be warranted in interfering to prevent the Dominion Government from pawning or hypothecating the western lands to the United States or anyone else, in order to raise money, because though we have made over the whole territory to the Dominion, with the view of giving the people autonomous government, the territory is really part of our Empire, and we have never given it wholly away. The sooner the Dominion Government is clearly made aware of this the better, as we are given to understand that the common talk in Canada is, that the value of the western lands will build the railway; and it is to be feared that Sir JOHN MACDONALD and his two confederates may have come over with some what loose ideas on the point, quite ready for hypothecation or anything else that may bring them the money and keep them in power. If this point is made perfectly clear, and beyond doubt, the Canadians will at once see that they cannot get the money at all, except through us, and therefore on our terms; and those terms ought to be "Free Trade with the Mother country," and no protective duties against her. On these terms we think it would be worth our while to lend them the amount of money really necessary for the railway, for it would be undoubtedly an immense benefit to this country to open up the Dominion trade, which already is not an inconsiderable one, and the possibilities of which in the future are enormous.

"But great as the advantage of Free Trade would be to this country, it would really be far greater to the Dominion itself. The Dominion is blind to its own interests, and we may well say with the Roman poet, 'O fortunati nimium, sua si bona norint.' They have the most splendid opportunities of a great trade that any country ever enjoyed if they only knew how to take advantage of them. If our goods were entered freely into their ports and markets, and permeating into the farthest corners of the land at moderate prices compared with those that prevail in the United States, the fact would soon tend to influence the tide of immigration in their direction, would bring customers across the borders to their merchants, and possibly create a through trade of great importance. We have no idea of advocating an underground traffic; but with 3000 miles of frontier it might become very difficult for the United States to keep up their high scale of tariff, and a more general benefit might result through its revision. Another condition of the loan, if we do give it, should be the selection of the most suitable line for the railway, and on that point there are wide differences of opinion. As far as Tete Jaune Cache they seem agreed, and that opens up the extensive valleys of the Saskatchewan and the Athabasca; but the ground between that point and the Pacific is little known, and Sir JOHN MACDONALD has committed his Government to one route, while Mr. MACKENZIE recommends another. The former takes a sweep to the northward through Columbia and descends on Bute Inlet in Queen Charlotte Sound; thence crosses by ferry to Vancouver Island, and traverses a great part of that to Esquimalt on the Juan-de-Fuca Strait. This route is said to be 3000 miles longer and four millions more costly than Mr. MACKENZIE'S, which takes a more southern line from Tete Jaune Cache, nearly direct to Port Moody on Burrard Inlet in the Strait of George on the mainland opposite Vancouver Island. It does not follow that the shortest and cheapest line is the best for this country to promote, and no great advantage would accrue to us from the shortest communication with the Pacific. The best route for this country will be that which opens up the largest tracts of fertile territory for colonization and future trade, and we ought to keep the selection of the line an open question till we are satisfied on that point. We must not be led into paying for the expensive route merely to play into the hands of politicians or land speculators, either in Vancouver Island or elsewhere. And on the other hand, it might be questionable policy to take the cheaper line if it passes through less valuable territory. The present Government have before them a splendid opportunity of settling this long-pending Canadian difficulty in a way highly beneficial to this country, and that would in all probability bring about the dawning of a new era in the prosperity of our great Dominion. We can fancy nothing more likely to waken the Canadians from their old torpor and stir them to new vigour and new life than breaking down the restrictions that have hampered their commerce and kept them poor. Their neighbors of the United States have advantages over them which, while both are fettered by tariffs, heavily weights the Dominion in the race; but we confidently believe that if these artificial restrictions were removed from the weaker and poorer, it would before long become the stronger and more prosperous nation.

Lines on a Skeleton.

Some forty years ago, the following poem was found in the London Morning Chronicle. Every effort was made to discover the author, even to the offering of a reward of fifty guineas. All that ever transpired was that the poem, in a fair, clerical hand, was found near a skeleton of remarkable symmetry of form, in the museum of the Royal College of Surgeons, Lincoln's Inn, London, and that the curate of the museum sent it to the Morning Chronicle:

Behold this ruin! 'Twas a skull
Once of the wharfed spirit full.
This narrow cell was life's retreat,
This space was thought's mysterious sent;
What beautiful visions filled this spot;
What dreams of pleasure long forgot;
Sorrow, nor joy, nor love, nor fear,
Have left one trace or record here.

Beneath this mouldering canopy
Once shone the bright and living eye;
But start not at the dismal void—
If social love that eye employed,
If with no lawless fire it gleamed;
Yet gentle concord never broke,
That silent tongue shall plead for thee
When time unsifted comes.

Say, did these fingers delve the mine,
Or trace the carved rubies shine;
To hew the rock or wear the gem
Can little now avail to them.
But if the page of truth they sought,
Or comfort to the mourner brought,
These hands a richer need shall claim
Than all that wait on wealth or fane.

Avails it, whether lark or shod
These feet the paths of duty trod;
If from the bowers of Ease they fled,
To seek Affliction's humble shed;
If grandeur's guilty bride they spurned,
And home to Virtue's cot returned,
These feet with angel's wings shall vie,
And tread the palace of the sky.

In the Whole History of Medicine

No preparation has ever performed such marvellous cures, or maintained so wide a reputation as AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, which is recognized as the world's remedy for all diseases of the throat and lungs. Its long continued series of wonderful cures in all climates has made it universally known as a safe and reliable agent to employ. Against ordinary colds, which are the forerunners of more serious disorders, it acts speedily and surely, always relieving suffering and often saving life. The protection it affords by its timely use in the throat and lung disorders of children, makes it an invaluable remedy to be kept always on hand in every home. No person can afford to be without it, and those who have once used it never will. From their knowledge of its composition and effects, Physicians use the CHERRY PECTORAL extensively in their practice, and Clergymen recommend it. It is absolutely certain in its remedial effects, and will always cure where cures are possible. For sale by all dealers. 10w

ASIZES AT CLINTON.—A Court of Assize and Gaol Delivery will be held at Clinton on the 16th October.

As Usual.

Defeat at Yale being regarded as inevitable the local Government organs, in accordance with their practice, have begun to throw overboard their canards. The Herald, for instance, in the issue of the 27th inst. says that Mr. Trapp was not put forward by his masters, that they had naught to do with his candidature, etc. After Monday next we shall be told by the organs that Mr. Trapp did not stand for the seat at all; and a hint that there was never a gentleman of the name of Trapp in existence may possibly be thrown out. If Mr. Trapp had a fair chance of election the organs would have been "sounding the loud timber" in his honor and burning the Roman candle at both ends in his praise. As "nothing succeeds like success," so with the organs, the greatest success of which a man can be guilty is to be beaten in a race for the House.

Victoria Fire Department.

The nomination of candidates for the Chief and Assistant Engineerships of the Fire Department takes place to-morrow at noon at the Board of Delegates' office, Union Hook and Ladder House. The following members of the department will be nominated: For Chief Engineer—Charles Phillips, nominee of the Deluge Engine Co.; Simeon Duck, nominee of the Tiger Engine Co.; Frank Richards, sen., nominee of the Union Hook and Ladder Co. For Assistant Engineer—Jos. Sears, nominee of the Deluge Engine Co.; Aug. Bordo, nominee of the Tiger Engine Co.; Jas. McKenzie, nominee of the Union Hook and Ladder Co. The election which takes place on October 6th will, in all probability, be very closely contested.

THE EXCURSION TO MAPLE BAY.—The steamer Cariboo-Fly left port at 8 o'clock yesterday morning for Maple Bay, having on board upwards of 150 excursionists who availed themselves of the excellent opportunity to attend the Agricultural Exhibition at that thriving settlement. The weather was by no means favorable for the event, rain falling at intervals during the day.

MARINE.—The ship Magna Charta, loading spars at Hastings mill, B. I., for London, will be ready for sea in 30 days. She commenced to receive her cargo on Monday last. The ship Elvira Doyale and the bark Ozoro, loading lumber at Moody & Co.'s mill for Iquique, will complete their cargoes on or about October 8th.

SAINT ANDREW'S CHURCH ENTERTAINMENT.—We understand from the rehearsals that have taken place during the past week a first class entertainment may be expected at Broughton street hall on Tuesday, first. The programme will include an amusing character in which seven well known amateurs will take part.

HARVEST HOME.—St. John's church has been prettily decorated with fruits, grain and flowers as a thanksgiving offering for an abundant harvest and harvest home services will be held to-day.

YALE ELECTION.—Yale will poll on Monday. We expect to ascertain the result at Hope, Yale and Cache Creek polling divisions the same evening.

SHUT DOWNS.—Hastings mill, Burrard Inlet, is temporarily shut down, only a few machinists being employed at present.

POLICE COURT.—A blank calendar at the City Police yesterday.

AN interesting case bearing upon the short-horn mania has just been tried at Gloucester assizes. A bull was exhibited at the Annual Short-horn Show at Birmingham in 1875, as by Grand Patriot out of Graceful. The animal was, of course, supposed to be of this most distinguished parentage on both sides, and skilled judges awarded it the first prize. There Mr. Allsopp saw the bull and bought it for the sum of 115 guineas. So far, however, from the bull having the five "successive crosses necessary to entitle him to be considered a bull of high degree, it was proved conclusively that this prizewinner, Grand Patriot II., was only by a pedigree bull by an ordinary cow. Mr. Allsopp, however, was quite satisfied with his purchase, and the bull became part of his herd. As a result he is now the happy possessor of some seventy calves, whose grandmother is an ordinary cow, and is likely to add another fifty-eight to the number of these low-caste beasts, thus lowering the whole character of his herd. The jury came to the conclusion that Mr. Allsopp had been imposed upon—as no doubt he had—and awarded him the sum of £750 damages. Nothing was heard during the trial of the judges at Birmingham annual show; but it would be curious to learn how they came to award the first prize in the short-horn class to a half-bred bull whose pedigree they had not investigated. —Pall Mall Budget.

A CURIOUS survival of an old-time institution exists in some remote places in England, viz., the official ale-taster. The ale-taster takes an oath to "try, taste and assize the beer and ale put on sale" in his district "whether the same be wholesome for man's body." The old ale-taster's method of "analyzing" beer for the purpose of detecting the addition of sugar to the liquor was rather primitive. Like most men in those times he wore leather breeches, and when he went to test the ale for the presence of sugar, a pint of fluid was spilt on a well-cleaned bench, and the taster sat upon it till it dried. If on rising the seat of the breeches stuck to the bench, then sugar was present, but if not the beer was pure.

FASHIONABLE MILLINERY.—Messrs. Shears & Partridge, of London House, have pleasure in announcing the arrival, per steamship City of Chester, of their first shipment of Millinery, Silks, Satins, Velvets, &c., &c. Messrs. S. & P. take this opportunity of notifying their patrons and the public generally that, although they do not adhere to a strictly cash business, they make a point of selling their goods as cheaply as any other house in the City.

UNITED STATES.
NEW YORK, Sept. 26th, 10.30 p.m.—Weston finished his 400th mile at 10.06, and Rowell his 450th at 10.07. Score of leaders at 10.07 was Rowell 450; Merritt 440; Hazael 430.

St. Louis, Sept. 27.—A private circular has been issued here by the Trades Assembly and sent to all assemblies in the United States and British North America, setting forth a project for a general strike of all trades. The time is to be determined by trades assemblies, which will take united action for the adoption and enforcement of the eight hour movement and the abolition of the truck system and child labor.

TOPEKA, KS., Sept. 27.—Governor St. John and other state officers will accompany the President to Leavenworth to-day and turn the party over to General Pope, whose guests they will be. They will be entertained there over night and on Sunday afternoon will start for Springfield, Ill., arriving at that point on Monday morning. This morning the President is tendered a reception at the capital building by the Governor and state officers. At the reception this morning a large number of ladies and gentlemen were presented to the President and to Gen. Sherman.

HALIFAX, Sept. 27.—Archbishop McKinnon, of Nova Scotia, died of paralysis at Antigonish, aged 69.

The Folly of Hasty Action.

[Boston Traveller.]

"Stop ze mooseek!" shouted Prince Perrino, pushing frantically through the hall of his villa. "Ze partie he is break up—one of ze guests insult my wife!" But before the ladies could get their shawls on the Prince came running back, saying: "Never mind, you dance plenteo more. Eet is all right—ze gentleman sav he did not, know it was my wife."

A REBUKE TO A JURYMEN.—The following story is told of Judge Parsons of Massachusetts: Being about to try a murder case, and among the names was that of Thomas H. Perkins, a leading merchant of Boston, and a personal friend of Judge Parsons. When the officer made his return he laid down a $50 bill before the Judge.

"What is that for?" said the Judge. "Mr. Perkins says he is very busy to-day and prefers to pay his fine."

"Take that back to Mr. Perkins," said the judge, "and tell him to come at once, and if he refuses bring him by force."

When Mr. Perkins appeared, the Judge looked sternly at him and said: "What do you mean, sir, by sending money when you are summoned to sit on this jury?"

Mr. Perkins replied: "I meant no disrespect to the Court, your Honor; but I was extremely busy fitting out a ship for the East Indies, and I thought if I paid my fine I would be excused."

"Fitting out ships for the East Indies, sir?" shouted the Judge; "and how happens it that you are able to fit out a ship for the East Indies?"

"Your Honor, I do not understand you."

"I repeat, then, my question: 'How is it that you are able to fit out a ship for the East Indies?' If you do not know, I will tell you. It is because the laws of your country are properly administered. If they were not you would have no ships. Go, take your seat with the jury."

THE PRINCE'S RESTING PLACE.—The remains of the young Prince Louis Napoleon, who met his death at the hands of the Zulus, and which at one time it was given out were to be interred in Westminster Abbey, will probably be laid at rest by the side of those of his father at Chislehurst. Since they have been brought over from Africa they have been lying in the little Chislehurst chapel. As the English public, through the columns of the press and in Parliament, has uttered a decided protest against the proposition to bury the French Prince in a cathedral in which only in rare and special instances a place has been given to foreigners, Dean Stanley, to relieve the Queen from the rumor that she had suggested this distinction, has deemed it necessary to say that the idea was adopted by him under the impression that he was fulfilling the wishes of the public. This quasi-apology for the error into which he had fallen, by mistaking the spirit of sympathy evinced by the English people for the sudden taking off of the Prince for a general desire to do special honor to his remains, is regarded as a forerunner of an intention to abandon the idea of interring them in the Abbey. —Bullington Star.

Two murders are reported from Ireland—one having been committed in County Meath where a farmer named Thomas Tandy was shot; and the other near Arklow, the victim in this case being a woman named Kennedy. No arrests have been made in the first case, but Michael Keogh, in whose house Kennedy was housekeeper, is in custody in connection with the latter.

The Premier has been enticed by one of the Conservatives of Oldham to give a written opinion on the subject of the Turnerell wreath. Lord Beaconsfield has ventured to write that he is "pleased to learn that a majority of those persons who were originally, by misleading representations, induced to sanction the surreptitious gift, approve of the course he took respecting a pseudo-testimonial."

Benjamin Orchard, late proprietor of the Liverpool Leader, and at one time secretary of a Young Men's Christian Association at Liverpool, has been before the Liverpool Magistrates for the attempted poisoning of two children by chloroform, and attempting suicide by same means. In reply to the charge, prisoner said:—"I did what I thought was the best for my own people and I am sorry I failed."

The last of the four 100-ton guns purchased by the Government from Sir Wm. Armstrong was fired on the 27th ult. at the Royal Arsenal proof butts at Woolwich, and all four of the guns may be regarded as having passed to preliminary ordeal in a satisfactory manner. Experiments are arranged to take place at Newhaven with a view of testing an improved range-finder which is said to be marvellously accurate. The instrument is a modification of the Italian range-finder, altered according to the designs of Gen. Younghusband, superintendent of the Royal Gun Factories, and considerable practice has been expended in bringing it to perfection. The distance of objects has been determined by it up to ranges of 10,000 yards, and it has been found possible to hit a small boat three miles out at sea at the first shot.

Lord Chelmsford and a number of other distinguished officers arrived by the steamer German at Plymouth on the 26th, from the scene of war in Zululand. The Plymouth correspondent of the Daily Telegraph says: Lord Chelmsford looks much aged since he left England; but passengers on board the German state he has wonderfully picked up on his homeward voyage. The immediate members of the family were of course soon round him, but after a few minutes' private conversation his Lordship cordially greeted all his old friends. Sir Evelyn Wood was eagerly sought after by many. The gallant officer, who appears in excellent health, stated that he should not have dreamt of returning had he not been under the impression that the war was over. He expressed great satisfaction at the effect which had appeared to receive the G. C. B. Colonel Bligh, C. C. B., was at once surrounded by a host of Devon friends, many of whom accompanied him to Exeter. Among the other officers, was Colonel Crealock, who throughout the African campaign has acted as chief of Lord Chelmsford's staff, and was one of the foremost to congratulate his Lordship on the honours which it is alleged are to be conferred upon him. The Colonel declared that the plan of campaign was substantially that which was originally fixed upon, and that there had been no serious deviation from it during the whole of the operations. Officers on board who were present at Ulundi declare that the defeat inflicted on the Zulu army was greater than has been represented by the reports already published, and are further of opinion that the war is at an end. Colonel Buller, in reply to an inquiry, expressed an opinion to the effect that the power of Cetewayo was completely broken, and that we had nothing to contend with except disjointed bands, who would be suppressed with little, if any, fighting. As soon as the passengers and mails had embarked, the captain of the German came to the gangway, followed by his officers and many passengers, the crew lining the rigging. Capt. Coxwell called for three cheers for Lord Chelmsford, which were enthusiastically given, the heartiness of the cheering being in no way diminished when similar demonstrations were asked for General Wood and Colonel Buller.

"ANOTHER burglary on my square last night," said old Dr. Willis, while dining with his partner the other evening. "For my own part I'm tired of paying taxes for the privilege of being robbed. I don't really see how the police can help arresting some thieves now and then, if only by accident, unless, indeed, the police are the burglars themselves. How is that you are never robbed, Joe?" "Simplest thing in the world. All you need is a little knowledge of human nature. Now, I'll bet there are three or four policemen in this house at the present moment. Let us go and see." And Joe led the way down into the basement, and the company peeped through the kitchen door. Sure enough, there sat four officers. One was fixing the fire, one was picking chickens while the others were shelling the peas and singing a chorus from Pinafore. "Well, I'm blessed!" said old Willis, "how do you manage it?" "Easy as rolling off a log. I keep a pretty servant girl!" —London Court Journal.

Words of the Wise.

Oh, how rare it is to find a soul still enough to hear God speak.—[Fenelon.] Nothing will make us so charitable as by self-examination thoroughly to know our own.—[Fenelon.]

If I have not a broken and contrite heart, God's mercy will never be mine; but if God had not manifested his mercy in Christ, infinite and free, I could never have a broken, contrite heart.—[Dr. Arnott.]

It is not falling into the water, but lying in the water that drowns. It is not falling into sin, but lying in sin, that destroys the soul. If sin and thy heart are two, Christ and thy heart are one.—[Thomas Brooks.]

Wisdom is better than riches. Wisdom guards thee, but thou must guard thy riches. Riches diminish in the using; but wisdom increases in the use of it.—[Arabic Proverb.]

The shortest and surest way to live with honor in the world is to be in reality what we would appear to be; and, if we observe, we shall find that all human virtues increase and strengthen themselves by the practice and experience of them.—[Socrates.]

Poverty is the load of some, and wealth is the load of others, perhaps the greater load of the two. It may weigh them to perdition. Bear the load of thy neighbor's poverty and let him bear with thee the load of thy wealth. Thou lightenest thy load by lightening his.—[Augustine.]

It were a desolate thing, indeed, to forbid the love of earth, if there were nothing to fill the vacant space in the heart. But it is just for this purpose that a sublimer affection may find room that the lower is to be expelled.—[F. W. Robertson.]

Do you say sin is too strong for you? It is not too strong for Omnipotence that dwelleth in you. I don't want so much to be afraid of going to hell, as to be afraid of sin. Let me be afraid of sin, and then I need not be afraid of going to hell.—[Rowland Hill.]

The cares which riches, no less than poverty, engender, are proverbial. Old stockings, stoves, chimneys, and mattresses seem to be favourite hiding places for the riches of this world. M. Neploz, a Parisian wine-merchant, thought of something better. He had scraped together some $200 in the wine business. To him the sum was important; and, as there was no safe-deposit company in the neighborhood, his mind was severely troubled. Every day M. Neploz received the most tempting circulars; investments in gold-mines, in new canals, and patent devices without number. One day, on going to his cellar, he saw a deep hole in the wall which he had not previously known about. Neploz was delighted, for now said he, "I can sleep contented nights." The money-bags were brought down and put into the mysterious cavity. Some little time afterwards his next-door neighbour had some wine to put in bottle, and he engaged two men for the purpose. As l'homme à la bouteille, some bottles they ing one-half for themselves, they carried 500 francs to their employers. Neploz heard of the treasure trove, and had a dire presentiment that it might be his own fortune. On going down to his cellar he found that the mysterious hole in the wall extended through, and that he had put his money in his neighbour's cellar. The workmen spent one-half of the money in two days, and the principal in the affair was condemned to six months imprisonment.

THE PRINCESS OF WALES LOYLER THAN EVER.—Everybody is saying that they have never seen the Princess of Wales more radiant than she is of late, not even on the morning, sixteen years ago, when in that jaunty hat and mauve poplin dress, she stepped ashore at Gravesend, and afterwards rode through London, taking triumphant possession of all our hearts. At the Greenwich school last week she looked almost as young and quite as charming in a costume of black and white striped silk, and it was easy to see how proud she is of her boys and of her husband, who wore the uniform of a captain in the Naval Reserves, with aiguillettes as aide-de-camp to the Queen, and with a few miniature orders on his left breast. I wonder how many uniforms H.R.H. possesses. Shall we see? He is a Field Marshal, Colonel of the Tenth Hussars and the Rifle Brigade, Colonel of the Norfolk Artillery Militia, Captain General of the Honorable Artillery Company, Colonel of the Civil Service Rifles, Colonel of the Oxford University Rifles, Colonel of the Cambridge University Rifles, Colonel of the Sutherland Rifles, Elder Brother of the Trinity House, Captain in the Royal Navy Reserve. But here I stop for breath, uncertain if I have exhausted the list. Of course, each of these positions has its appropriate and special uniform.—Corr. Philadelphia Times.

PERIQUE CIGARETTES.—Frank Campbell, the well-known tobaccoist, has just received his first shipment of La Belle Perique Cigarettes, which are entirely manufactured from the celebrated Perique Tobacco and fitted with patent corn-husk mouth-pieces. Their flavor is exceedingly agreeable and their aroma very fragrant. Mr. Campbell is sole agent for the sale of the Cigarettes in British Columbia.

R. B. THOMPSON, DENTIST, has resumed practice from San Francisco and resumed the practice of his profession at the late residence of Sheriff Harris on Broad Street, near Fort.

A NEW LANGUAGE.—The language of postage stamps, instead of flowers, has just been invented. Thus, when a postage stamp has been placed upside down on the left corner of the letter it means, "I love you;" in the same crosswise, "My heart is another's;" straight up and down, "Good-bye, sweetheart, good-bye;" upside down in the right hand corner, "Write no more;" in the centre at the top, "Yes;" opposite at the bottom, "No;" on the right hand corner at a right angle, "Do you love me?" in the left hand corner, "I hate you;" top corner of the right, "I wish your friendship;" bottom corner on the left, "I seek your acquaintance;" on a line with the surname, "accept your love;" the same upside down, "I am engaged;" at a right angle in the same place, "I long to see you;" in middle at the right hand edge, "Write immediately." While this is all very good as far as it goes, those who put a postage stamp on any but the upper right hand corner of an envelope must themselves be responsible for all the swearing of the postoffice clerks. Albany Press.

Liver is King.

The Liver is the imperial organ of the whole human system, as it controls the life, health and happiness of man. When it is disturbed in its proper action, all kinds of ailments are the natural result. The digestion of food, the movements of the heart and blood, the action of the brain and nervous system, are all immediately connected with the workings of the Liver. It has been successfully proved that Green's August Flower is unequalled in curing all persons afflicted with Dyspepsia or Liver Complaint and all the numerous symptoms that result from an unhealthy condition of the Liver and Stomach. Positively sold in all the towns on the Western Continent. Three doses will prove that it is just what you want. *

ANOTHER WONDERFUL CURE —EFFECTED BY—
California Elastic Truss!
CALIFORNIA ELASTIC TRUSS CO., W. J. HORME, Proprietor—Dear Sir: I feel that I owe it to you and to humanity to write the fact that I have been cured of a bad case of rupture of thirty years' standing, by one of your incomparable Trusses, which I purchased from your office in San Francisco. I can not describe the suffering, both physically and mentally, that I have undergone during that period; and now I feel like a new being. I have worn all kinds of Trusses, both Steel and Elastic, and never received any permanent relief until I tried yours. Its simplicity of construction, and facility with which it can be adjusted, and the ease and perfect freedom to the motions of the body with which it can be worn without causing any irritation, are its chief merits, and it is a perfect support. I have not had any sign of a return of the rupture since the day I put it on, and I feel that I am PERPETUALLY CURED. It is invaluable to all who are afflicted with this kind of trouble. You can refer anyone to me on any point of the merits I am truly yours,
